Let's look at this week's story

Pakistan has had the heaviest rainfall in decades. The United Nation's (UN) Secretary General has urged the world to help Pakistan, after floodwater covered a third of the country. Starting an appeal to help the tens of millions affected by the disaster, Secretary General Antonio Guterres blamed exceptionally high levels of rain and climate change. The flooding has affected millions of people in Pakistan as the heavy rains have washed away roads, people's homes, and farms. Emergency services have been pushed to their limits trying to rescue those stranded and evacuate them to temporary housing.

Look at the resource below, which shares some information about the flooding in Pakistan.

Flooding in Pakistan

Monsoon rains happen every year in Pakistan. A monsoon is heavy rains that accompany the seasonal wind of South Asia that blows from the southwest in summer.

Heavy rainfall is expected by people living in Pakistan but this year's intense monsoon season has caused devastating floods. Some of the floods have occurred inland because of the excessive rainfall; others have struck coastal areas because of sea-level rise.

Vast areas of the country have been left underwater, buildings, roads and other structures have been destroyed and millions of people are homeless.

Is climate change to blame?

Outside of polar regions, Pakistan has the highest number of glaciers (huge masses of slowly moving ice). Higher temperatures have led to more water flowing down from the melting ice in the Himalayas.

Some scientists believe the large amount of rainfall is caused by a warmer atmosphere holding more water, therefore producing heavier downpours.

Do you think climate change is responsible for the flooding?
What other factors might be responsible?

Read through the information below, which explains what is happening in Pakistan and what is currently being done to help.

What is happening in Pakistan?

Over 30 million people, including around 16 million children, have been affected by this year's heavy rains in Pakistan, which have brought huge flooding and landslides. Some major rivers have breached their banks and dams have overflowed, destroying homes, farms and transport links including roads and bridges.

What is being done to help?

UNICEF is delivering life-saving medical and other emergency supplies to support those affected, including drinking water, water purification tablets, hygiene kits, medicines, vaccines, nutritional supplements for children and mosquito nets.

The Red Cross is working with organisations as part of the DEC (Disasters Emergency Committee) and is offering emergency tents and hygiene kits for families in need.

Governments around the world are offering their support, including the UK's, through resources and funding. Humanitarian support totalling £15 million from the UK will help provide shelter and essential supplies to people across the country.

Reflecting

Something terrible happening somewhere else in the world can make us feel helpless, lost and confused. But God teaches us to be strong, courageous, to care for others, to have compassion and to have hope. There is always hope even in the darkest of times. The life of Jesus is a sign of God giving us Hope.

We can often see hope in how people help others during and after difficult times.

Prayer

Dear God,

We pray for the millions of people affected by the floods in Pakistan. Thank you, to those, all over the world, who are helping.

Thank you for giving us strength, courage and hope and that in times of difficulty we know you are there to help and guide us.

Amen
